FOREWORD

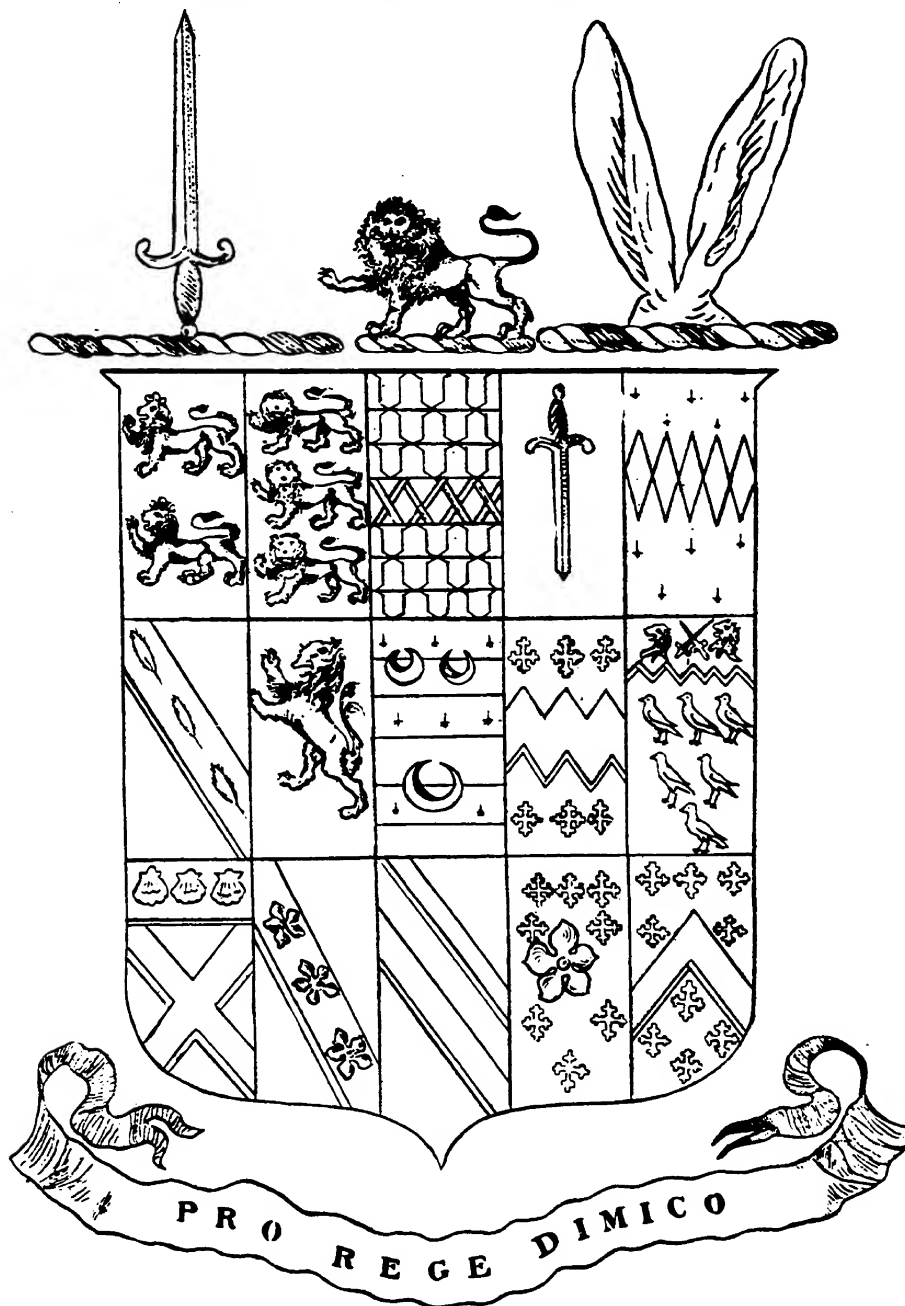

From the time of Marmion and William the Conqueror (1066) to Everett Aborn Bradway (1918) twenty-six generations have appeared upon the stage.

Accepting the historic statement that both William the Conqueror and Marmion were descendants (6th generation) from a common ancestor Rollo (860), Everett Aborn Bradway can trace his ancestry for thirty-two generations, over a space of 1058 years, or more than one half of the Christian era.

MARMYUN—DYMOKE—DIMOCK.

Both William, afterwards called the Conqueror, and the Marmions were descendants (6th generation) from a common ancestor, Rollo (A. D. 860) called "the ganger" from his marvellous activity.

* * * * *

When William came over to seek his fortune in England he brought with him, as might have been expected, his Champion, Sir Robert Marmion, the Sire or Lord of Fontenay.

* * * * *

The present Champion is a lineal descendant of Sir Philip Marmion through the lady whose marriage with the Gloucester Knight in the days of Edward III., is the link that connects the houses of Dymoke and Marmion.

There is no doubt that Sir Philip Marmion was directly descended from the great Robert Dispensator, who accompanied William of Normandy in his descent upon England in the year 1066.
